Growing Up in a Coal Mine Camp School in Southern Colorado During the Great Depression. Part III

by Nick Lovdjieff

Many service men, especially those who had been in difficult combat duty, experienced difficulty when they returned to civilian life. By comparison I, and many others, experienced only minor problems. We did not return with injuries and were not affected by what is now recognized as post traumatic stress disorder (PTSD). Millions who had entered into military service in their late teens were returning as mature veterans. They encountered problems where the economy was still undergoing conversion to post-war production. Consumer goods were in short supply; there was a shortage of housing; and perhaps most important for me, good paying jobs were scarce.

After my sea chest and the rest of my clothes caught up with me, I boarded a train to Minnesota. My goals for this visit were to find a job, an apartment, to buy an engagement ring and to make wedding plans. Job interviews made me painfully aware employers were not interested in my B.S. Degree with a Major in Naval Science and Tactics. I had no success finding an apartment. I became very depressed. Concerned about not being able to get a job, I suggested it might be wise for me to request reassignment in the Regular Navy. That upset Evy. She had achieved her "dream job" as private secretary for Minneapolis Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey and was not eager to leave and marry a transient Navy officer. Our disagreement worsened when I suggested she was more devoted to her job than to our future.

Wanting to achieve something positive from this trip, I went to Jacob's Jewelers and purchased a ring. That evening when we were alone, I presented the ring. She looked it for a long time, then quietly said, "I'm sorry, I can't take your ring," and left the room. I was devastated. During my 11 day visit, I somehow managed to derail our wedding plans. I returned the ring and a few days later bid Evy a cool goodbye at the train station, returning home to Walsenburg to sort out my future plans.

Late on the day of my departure, Evy wrote a long impassioned letter telling me we had both made a mistake. It was the most important of the 105 letters I had received from her. Some excerpts follow: " . . . . I'm lonesome for you and wish you were here so I could talk to you. . . . I wish I had your ring. . . . my job doesn't rate at all compared to you. . . . I have the same feeling you have- if we don't get married now, we'll be sorry." I was elated with her letter. I returned to Minnesota and managed to get an office job. Evy finally got her engagement ring and we were married on November 23, 1946.

Housing was very scarce after the war. We rented a room for several months in the home of Evy's brother and sister-in-law. In March, 1947, we moved into our first apartment, one half of a Quonset hut in a housing complex for veterans at 41st and Bloomington in Minneapolis; it was our home for five years.

I had never considered being a teacher but I was unhappy with my routine office job and future prospects with Brown and Bigelow in St. Paul. So I enrolled in the College of Education at the University of Minnesota, graduating in spring, 1948. In September, I began my teaching career as a junior high mathematics teacher in Robbinsdale.

Evy's boss, HHH, was elected to the US Senate that year. He wanted her to accompany his staff to Washington and assured us he would help me get a teaching job there. But we declined and she resigned.

School at the University of Minnesota for 2 years. In September 1951, I began teaching in Minneapolis, first at

High School, and finally at Susan B. Anthony Junior High School for my last year as a teacher in 1962.

Why did I leave teaching? The simple answer is “Sputnik.” When Russia launched Sputnik in October, 1957, educators in the US became concerned that American students were falling behind Russian students in mathematics and science. In 1961, a 4 million dollar grant from the National Science Foundation to rewrite the science and mathematics curriculums led to the formation of the School Mathematics Study Group (SMSG). I was one of 13 junior high mathematics teachers from the US recruited to write “new math” textbooks for grades 7 and 8. We spent the summers of 1959, 1960 and 1961 at the U of Michigan, Stanford, and Yale with mathematics educators and mathematicians writing the pupils’ and teachers’ editions. Other teams prepared books for elementary and high school students. When published, the SMSG textbooks were made available to selected schools for experimental use and for publishing companies to use when preparing new editions of their textbooks. I used the SMSG Algebra I textbook for a grade 9 class during my last year of teaching at Susan B. Anthony. (I recently made contact with one of the students in that class who still resides in Minnesota.)

My experience with SMSG led to my being recruited to work as an editor in the Scott, Foresman Mathematics Department in Chicago. At the time, I thoroughly enjoyed teaching. Evy, I and our three children were very happy with life in Minnesota. We had relatives and many friends in the area, so this was a very difficult choice for us, but the future salary and benefits were a big consideration. For my first year of teaching I received $2400. At that time, there was a dual salary schedule. Single women were paid less than men and married women were not hired as teachers. Teachers were paid only during the school year, so each summer I either taught summer school classes or sought a part-time job. I needed only to complete my Master’s thesis to qualify for a principal’s position. I felt I had a good chance of being appointed because I had placed 7th in a group of 28 on the National Teacher Exams. Becoming a principal would result in greater income, but I was not sure I wanted to go that route. As the post war economy began to pick up in the 1950s, salaries for engineers, construction people and other professionals became more competitive and inflation began to set in. In the 1960-61 school year, my salary was $10,000. However, salaries in other professions had increased more rapidly than salaries for teachers. Carpenters were being paid more than teachers. Teachers who complained about being underpaid often were reminded, “Well, you only work for 9 months a year.” In the mid 1950s, I wrote several letters that were published in the Minneapolis Star Journal, advocating for greater teachers’ salaries. In one, in response to a critic who wrote that teachers worked only 8 months a year and during the school year had many days set aside for holidays and conferences, I wrote, “. . . while true that in Minneapolis a teacher receives $5500 after 11 years service, a teacher’s salary cannot be computed on an hourly basis. Teachers do not punch a time clock, and their work day does not start or end with school time.” In my letter I went on to point out that in the 11 years it takes a teacher to reach the maximum on the salary schedule, a journeyman carpenter would have earned $14,300 more than a teacher in total earnings.

Ultimately, the decision was made, and I began work at Scott, Foresman on June 25, 1962 as an Associate Editor. As a student in the coal mine camp school so long ago, I had never envisioned working for the publishing company that had published some of my textbooks. When I enlisted in the regular Navy in 1942, my goal was to get a job with security potential. When my fiancée persuaded me to “give civilian life a try,” the security potential of a teaching job had strong appeal for me. My choice to leave teaching and go to Scott, Foresman turned out to be a wise one. Eventually, I became Editorial Vice President, Mathematics, head of a department of 30 people. I retired in June, 1979 after a 25 year career.

After retirement, Evy and I were “Snowbirds,” spending winters in a small condo in Naples, Florida. We joined Immanuel Lutheran Church there and became leaders of the Serving Others Ministry Committee. Our proudest achievement was getting the congregation involved with Habitat for Humanity, leading successful campaigns to raise enough money to pay for 10 Habitat Houses.

In that special letter in 1946 Evy wrote, “Everything will work out for us if we get married first and face things together.” That was a prophetic statement. Everything did work out beautifully for us. But our “fairytale” courtship and marriage ended when Evy was diagnosed with Alzheimer’s Disease in 2009. We moved into our Campbell House apartment on May 21, 2010. I was able to provide the care she needed in our apartment for 3 ½ years. After another 3½ years in a care center for dementia patients, Evy’s death came at age 96 on June 25, 2017. We had been partners for 70 ½ years and blessed with 3 children, 10 grandchildren and now 13 great grandchildren. Since her death, I moved to a condo in Luther

MRTI Teacher Grants at Work

Just as students were returning for in-person classes, the MRTI Grant committee was able to deliver 81 water bottles for students at Folwell's Performing Arts Magnet School. Shown here is Amanda Lodermeier who applied for grant funding to provide 81 water bottles for several classes.

Due to COVID restrictions, the school has only one water fountain to serve the entire school, so MRTI donors are doing their part to keep students hydrated. Fortunately, a sale at COSTCO allowed us to purchase the bottles at $3.00 each instead of the Target price of $10.00 each. Larry Risser picked up the bottles and delivered them just before students arrived.

Funds are available for medical reimbursement.

Spring Report on MN Legislature

President Biden and the Democrats in Congress passed the Stimulus Relief Act, providing many needed benefits to states, cities, counties and schools. In his revised budget, Gov. Walz is increasing basic per pupil state aid by 1.5% in year one and 2.5% in year two of the biennium state budget. There is money for all E-12 students to attend summer school this year to make up for lost class time. A big question remains for special education funding. Supt. Ed Graff reported that Minneapolis spent over $100 million on special education services last year and was reimbursed only $50 million, which put $50 million on the property taxes of Minneapolis residents and businesses.

The Stimulus bill also provides $86 billion to shore up faltering trade union and Teamsters pension systems. Many conservative actions have reduced union membership and hence reduced contributions. This action was highlighted during the RTC-59 Zoom meeting on March 23rd.

State help for businesses damaged or destroyed by last summer's protests and riots is urgently needed. We urge MRTI members to call their senators and representatives to take action on this issue. This is a case of the urban/ rural divide that exists in our state legislature.

Another issue is our pension system in Minnesota. The legislature asked TRA to study the Cost of Living Adjustments (COLAs) in other states. The study found that the cut in our TRA COLAs, enacted to secure our pension system, has left a pension deficiency for many retired teachers. The Committee of Thirteen has again joined the Public Employees Pension Coalition (PEPC) to jointly lobby for a better approach to COLAs for all Public Employees in Minnesota. We are hopeful that the combined approach will bring clarity to the state -mandated cuts for Minnesota pensioners' COLAs.- Ed Andersen, MRTI Legislative Chair
